

Week 1	Mon Hematology	Tues Hematology	Wed Infectious Disease	Thurs Infectious Disease	Fri Dermatology	Sat Endocrinology	Sun Rest
Week 2	Mon Neurology	Tues Neurology	Wed Psychiatry	Thurs OBGYN	Fri OBGYN	Sat OBGYN	Sun Rest
Week 3	Mon Urology	Tues HEENT	Wed HEENT	Thurs Cardiology	Fri Cardiology	Sat Cardiology Practice Test 1	Sun Rest
Week 4	Mon Pulmonology	Tues Pulmonology	Wed Pulmonology	Thurs GI	Fri GI	Sat GI Practice Test 2	Sun Rest
Week 5	Mon Orthopedics	Tues Orthopedics	Wed Practice Test 3	Thurs Review	Fri Rest	Sat PANCE	Sun Party

For my PANCE study plan, I found that the end of rotation exams have been a good barometer for subjects that I need to improve on. I definitely did better on some tests than on others, which has helped me focus in on specific areas after checking the breakdown of the scores on the PAEA website. I've created a 5 week schedule that will help highlight some of these areas and reinforce some of the larger topics that will appear with greater frequency on the exam. I will also dedicate more days to topics that have higher yield like GI and pulmonology. I will start initially with topics that have lower yield and those I know fairly well, and progress to larger topics and those that I did not know as well on the EOC.

As for my study habits themselves, I've become an early riser, so I intend to start early in the morning. I plan on studying from 8AM-11AM and then taking a break to play tennis at the park near my apartment or workout for an hour, then have lunch, and then continue to study from 2PM-4PM. After this I will take a 60 question practice exam with a time limit of 60 minutes. After taking the test, I will immediately retake a test composed of all the questions that I got wrong in order to reinforce the correct answer. At the end of my 3rd and 4th week I will take a practice NCCPA 120 question test. 3 days before my PANCE I will take a final practice exam that is timed similarly to the actual exam, with 300 questions and 5 sections with 60 questions each. I will also allow myself the same 45 minutes of break time and figure out how best to use it during the PANCE.

I will utilize questions from Rosh Review and SmartyPANCE, and videos from Osmosis to supplement my study materials from Pance Prep Pearls. I will also attend the study session from January 3rd to January 6th. I think all of this will give me the strongest chances at passing on my first attempt.